MINDS OF ANIMALS.—Dr. W. Lander Lindsay, of whose views on the subject of animal psychology we have before spoken, is a Scottish physician, devoted to mental diseases, but who also takes a great interest in the minds of the lower animals, the study of which he is now systematically prosecuting. He believes that animals have minds as really as do men, and that although vastly and variously lower, they are still kindred to the human mind, and upon analysis yield the same mental elements or rudiments of the faculties. But he goes still further, and affirms not only that animals have true mental natures, but that these are liable to derangement; that is, in fact, animals are subject to the same mental diseases as man. He has recently published an elaborate paper on insanity in the lower animals, in which he gives the most curious and interesting proofs that they also are deranged in all kinds of ways. Even the rered questions of civilization and insanity he finds mixed up with this lower animal problem. Dr. Tukey, an eminent authority on human insanity, remarks that there is an acuteness of sensibility, a susceptibility of the emotions, an intense activity of the feelings, which would seem to be peculiar to highly civilized life, and out of this state of the nervous system come various predispositions to mental disease. Dr. Lindsay holds that this is equally true of animals. He says: "The effect of domestication and breeding in the whole nervous system, including especially the brain, is another subject of the first importance in relation to the symptoms of insanity in animals. High breeding, for instance in dogs and horses, begets extreme nervous sensibility, including high mental sensitiveness, one result of which is great susceptibility to diseases of the entire nervous system. The distinguished Parisian physiologist, M. Claude Bernard, has pointed out the effect of breeding in the obvious differences as regards nervous sensibility or irritability between high-bred animals and the same species in the wild or natural state. He says: 'So exquisite is the nervous sensibility of dogs of the higher breed that the slightest odors of the higher breed are attended with alarming symptoms. They cannot, therefore, be employed in researches connected with the gastric juice; in fact all operations performed within the abdominal cavity are liable to superinduce peritonitis, which generally proves fatal.' In dogs of a lower breed the results are totally different, and M. Bernard states that in the horse these differences are, if possible, still more strongly marked."—Galaxy.

AN ACTOR CLERGYMAN.—[From the Louisville Ledger.]—The announcement Saturday morning of the death of Rev. Dr. C. B. Parsons, minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was received with a general feeling of sorrow. His death has been expected for some time, but the shock was none the less severe. No man in the folds of the Methodist Church ever wielded a greater power or had a wider reputation than Dr. Parsons. A splendid elocutionist, a natural orator, and gifted with an unusual share of magnetism, he swayed his audience with an irresistible power.

Charles Booth Parsons was born in Enfield, Conn., July 23, 1805, and consequently was in his sixty-seventh year at the time of his death. At the early age of eighteen he went to Providence, R. I., and engaged in business. Shortly afterward his business house was destroyed by fire, and he turned his attention to the stage, and made his debut in the Old Bowery Theatre in New York.

Shortly afterward he came West, and played a number of engagements in this and Southern cities. Oct. 30, 1831, he was married to Miss Emily C. Oldham of this city. In 1838 he abandoned the stage, and joining the Methodist Church, under the ministrations of the Rev. John Maffit, a famous revivalist, in March, 1839, was licensed to preach. He returned to the stage for a short time but soon renounced it forever. At the conclusion of a successful engagement in this city, he came before the curtain and delivered an address, announcing his abandonment of the stage, and his intention of uniting himself with the Christian church. The affair created quite a sensation at the time.

Many stories have been told of his conversion. The correct version is as follows: After he had attained considerable reputation as an actor, he paid a visit to his family in Connecticut. His brother, the Rev. Dr. Parsons, a Presbyterian minister, determined to accompany him to the West. At Baltimore the actor had an engagement, and as he left the hotel his brother, the minister, said that he would pray for him. Upon his return from the theatre he found his brother upon his knees, and from that time he dated his conversion.

His success as an actor was great, but his true field was in the ministry. Arab Ladies Perfume.—How Arab ladies perfume themselves is thus described by Sir Samuel Baker, in his work on the Nile: "In the hut and tent, as it may chance to be, a small hole is excavated, sufficiently large to contain a champagne bottle. A fire of charcoal, or simply glowing embers is made within the hole, into which the woman about to be scented throws a handful of drugs. She then takes off the clothes or robe which forms her dress, and crouches naked over the fumes, while she arranges her robe to fall as a mantle from her neck to the ground as a tent. She now begins to perspire freely in the hot air bath, and the pores of the skin being open and moist, the volatile oil from the smoke of the burning perfumes is immediately absorbed. By the time the fire has expired the scenting process is completed, and both her person and her robe are redolent of incense, with which she is so thoroughly impregnated that I have frequently smelt a party of women coming from a distance blowing from their direction. This scent, which is supposed to be very attractive, is composed of ginger, cloves, cinnamon, frankincense, and myrrh, a species of seaweed brought from the Red Sea, and lastly, the horny disc which covers the aperture when the shell-fish withdraws itself within its shell. The proportion of the ingredients in this mixture is according to taste.
